June 19th 1790

Sir

Mr. Perott tells me that you do not make a practice of discharging Vagrants, at the expiration of the time for which they are Committed without a discharge in writing from the Magistrate, this is giving the Magistrate Unnecessary Trouble I think no person ought to be held in confinement without legal Authority not even for an hour, I hope therefore you will discharge all Vagrants committed by me at the expiration of the Time for which they are committed without waiting for an Order for that purpose

Yours &c.
Saml. Miles

Capt. John Reynolds

I conceive that an Alderman or Justice cann[illegible] commit a runaway or disorderly Servant or [illegible] [illegible]prentice for a longer time than 30 days - nor can they [illegible] commit or extend that time, without a fresh fault -

The Inspectors however will not be safe in discharging them at the end of 30 days, because the Magistrates having a Jurisdiction whether they have exercised that Authority regularly the Inspectors cannot determine -

I dont recollect any Law by which the Inspectors can compel the Masters to pay the expenses of their keeping when [illegible]charged

Disor[illegible]ly or runaway Slaves, are generally upon the same footing with Apprentices except the provision contained in the 8 Sect. of a Law of the former Province of Pennsylvania passed AD 1700 p 8 Province Laws - which directs that a runaway Servant shall be delivered, when apprehended to the Sheriff who is to give Notice to the Master - I dont know that this Clause has ever been construed to extend to Apprentices

[illegible] June 1820
